

Most of my working life was as part of a collectively managed publishing company, so I do have experience working together with others to achieve our goals.

I have also spent a lot of my life avoiding participation in traditional institutions.

However, I decided to get involved with GVR as a board member because I really valued that organization, and, in addition to learning a lot during my four year tenure, I found I liked having a say in how it was run.

I also very much value the community of Borderlands and feel it is time I step up and take some responsibility for its future.
